Prof. Marshal Liu Receives Common Core Teaching Excellence Award

Prof. Marshal Liu has been awarded “Honorary Mention” at the 2017 Common Core Teaching Excellence Award.

The Common Core program is an important part of the undergraduate curriculum that aims to develop students as intellectuals, independent thinkers and responsible citizens. The Award recognizes educators who have made substantial contribution to the design and teaching of the common core courses.

To this end, Prof. Marshal Liu has been recognized for his leadership in developing the new common core course: CENG 1800 Introduction to Food Science and Technology.

“We are fortunate to have colleagues like Profs Marshal, Henry Lam and Ying Chau who make selfless commitments and devotions to inspire and impact our undergraduate education through teaching innovation, experiential learning and curriculum and pedagogy development,” said Prof I-Ming Hsing, Head of CBE.
